My favourites are the title story "Delhi is not far", for the way it shows even the poorest have aspirations and dreams; the beautiful "Time stops at Shamli", an evocative almost-love story; and "A job well done" where Dukhi, the gardener ekes a terrible, yet matter-of-fact revenge on a bullying master.

Far is an ode to their hopeful dreams about the fabled journey to Delhi, the city of glorious destinies. It sketches a dynamic scene of small-town India with its simple-minded people. It also represents a romantic picture of life in rural India. The story is about a love affair in which there are no losers.

'Delhi is Not Far', in the end, is the perfect representation of life in small town India, and how everyone there is always dreaming of something more. Arun sums it up perfectly when he tells Suraj, towards the end of the story, "This is where I've existed. I only began to live when I realized I could leave

“Delhi is Not Far” is a contemporary form of the proverb “Dilli Durr Ast”, descending from the Mughal Era. Arun, the book’s protagonist, uses the same words in a different time, in a different setting, for different means, but to the same effect. Is Delhi that far for the inhabitants of Pipalnagar’s sleepy town?
