From the lowrance 3500 manual. The 3500 can use any Lowrance 192 kHz transducer with gray connectors. For the best performance, we recommend a transducer with a narrow (8°) cone angle. See your transducer owner's manual for installation instructions. Most newer units use 200kHz transducers. Also my unit does not hold the settings on power down either.

Your 3400 should have used a dual frequency transducer the most common of them too. 50/200 Khz so just about any head unit you get will be able to use the same transducer you'll just need to cut the plug for the head unit and rewire it. As far as size goes you can pick what you want and get panels to fill in made at most marinas for under $50.
