Refuge can mean different things to different people and this idea is at the centre of Jackie French's novel. It is a story of despair, suffering, terror, love, family, friendship and hope. Faris is escaping an oppressive regime in his homeland (unspecified, but I assumed it was Middle Eastern) and on the way to Australia the rust bucket carrying him and his grandmother, Jadda, starts to leak and is swamped by a wave.

To find the strength, the courage to survive.’ (Refuge, pp.73-4)
Though the subject matter is heavy, this book is utterly accessible and terribly poignant. This is a powerful novel and an unusual mix of realism and fantasy, which works ridiculously well due only to the skill of Jackie French.
